Linux Power Management

For mobile devices power consumption is quite important for their success. When mobile we need the best possible system behaviour that would make the battery to last.

Every Linux system has those elements that allow us to tune the system to be battery friendly. Those elements include CPU frequency scaling, suspend/resume to RAM or disk, as well as optimise user space applications that do not trigger unnecessary events in the system.